

Booth and Niece Who Finally Revealed Assassin's Fate

Here are three pictures of John Wilkes Booth. That on the left was taken before his assassination of Abraham Lincoln. That on the right was given by Booth to Finis L. Bates to be shown to his brother, Edwin Booth. At that time Booth was known as John St. Helen and had confessed his identity to Bates. The middle picture (inset) is that of Booth after his death at the age of 65 in Oklahoma, when he was known as David E. George and after he had again confessed his identity. His body has been embalmed by a process similar to mummification.

Below is a picture of Blanche Booth, niece of Edwin Booth and of John Wilkes Booth, whose admission in Minneapolis clears up the controversy over the fate of the assassin.
