To the Editor Dearborn Independent

Dear Sir

Your very interesting article on the death of "John Wilkes Booth" in Feb 7 Paper makes me feel that I should help you out in that article that disobedient sergent that shot "Booth" was "Louie Burrell" an American of French extraction who after the war lived with a family named Titterton in 19th st just west of 7th ave New York. He got a position in the custom House in New York and while there in ^{Secretary} of United States Navy "Robinson" time got old, and Inspectors Robinson thought Louie was too old and either discharged him or asked for his Resignation. He blamed "Robinson" for it anyway; He brooded over it for a few days - then met Robinson in one of the Passage ways and shot him - although only a flesh wound - Louie tried to kill him.

He was overpowered lacked rep - for a while but the Grand Army got busy and got him out. He died a year or so after an old silent Broken hearted man
